

Atticus Hainsworth took a first degree in Natural Sciences at Cambridge University and a PhD in Biophysics at Rush Medical Center, Chicago. He has carried out translational research in stroke and dementia for the past 18 years. His research focus is in cerebral small vessel disease, seeking to discover molecular mechanisms and therapeutic targets. Currently he is Chief Investigator on a phase II clinical trial (PASTIS) for possible repurposing of tadalafil in vascular dementia.