

Tine Dalsgaard Clausen, MD, PhD, Associate Professor

Specialized in Obstetrics and Gynecology 2012. Since 2015 Consultant and Associate Professor at Department of Gynecology and Obstetrics, Nordsjaellands Hospital, Hilleroed, Denmark. Clinical expertise includes diabetes, overweight and medical complications/conditions during pregnancy.

Defended PhD in 2008 "Diabetes in Pregnancy - long-term implications for the offspring". Main research area includes Developmental Origin of Health and Disease within the field "offspring from pregnancies with diabetes" as well as "long-term offspring consequences of delivery by cesarean section". Research methods include, clinical follow-up studies, epidemiologi and registerbased studies. Supervisor for PhD students, author of papers and bookchapters, invited talks and presentations at international meetings and conferences as well as reviewer for international peer-reviewed journals.

Member of the Diabetic Pregnancy Study Group (DPSG) since 2014.