

Dr. Peters is a Professor of Medicine and Chief of Hepatology Research at the University of California at San Francisco, where she currently holds the John V. Carbone, MD, Endowed Chair in Medicine. She received her Bachelor of Medicine/Bachelor of Surgery degree and her Doctorate of Medicine from Melbourne University Medical School in Melbourne, Australia. She trained in internal medicine, specializing in gastroenterology, hepatology, and immunology in Australia, USC and NIH. Dr. Peters' clinical and research interests focus on viral hepatitis B and C and the effect of alcohol and HIV on disease progression. She lectures frequently at medical institutions in the US and abroad, on viral hepatitis, the management of transplant recipients and on immunology of liver diseases. Dr. Peters is the author or co-author of many articles on subjects relating to viral hepatitis in particular with HIV infection and liver transplantation in prestigious medical journals.

Marion Peters
Chief of Hepatology Research
513 Parnassus Ave S357
Phone 415-476-2777