Shichuo Li

China

In China, epilepsy was described two thousand two hundred years ago in “the Medical Classic of the Yellow Emperor” (Huang Di Nei Jing) and has been treated by “Traditional Chinese Medicine” (TCM, including herbal medicine, acupuncture and moxibustion) in a long history and plenty of helpful experiences on treatment accumulated. Up to date, herbal medicines are widely tried by patients in China for control of seizures or mitigation of side effects from antiepileptic drugs (AEDs).

This presentation tries to, through literature review, analyze the theory of TCM treatment of epilepsy, sum up the clinical, research situation, describe practical problems and propose strategies for solution.
